Introduction

What Are Choice Activities?

We know kids thrive on choice! Activities which match their unique way of learning provide motivation to learn a new topic. Choice Activities provide the structure to allow kids to do their very best.

How Do Choice Activities Work?

Choice Activities are versatile. You can have kids research a topic on their own and complete a Choice Activity with support from you. You can also present a lesson, read a book or watch a video on the topic and then use a Choice Activity to check for understanding and extend their learning. The great part of Choice Activities is they are open enough that students can do their own research and learn it at any level, from a very general understanding to an in-depth study.

You can also use Choice Activities to encourage your kids to try to use a skill they are not as good at yet. For example, you can tell them they have to choose one writing activity and one art activity.

Differentiation

We know each child is uniquely gifted and can succeed in learning. Choice Activities are very flexible in their use. If a kid struggles with writing, you can modify the requirements to shorten the length of any writing they will have to do, or you can encourage them to choose a different activity which will showcase their understanding without being heavy on the writing side. Some kids do better with presenting their thoughts in artwork or illustrations, have them do an activity which allows them to show their understanding through this modality and then have them use that completed activity as a reference for tackling another activity. For younger kids scale back the requirements and for older kids encourage using multiple sources for information.

Choice Activity Minimum Requirements

The following minimum requirements are just a starting point for your projects. They will guide you as you create a quality final product you can be proud of. If you are struggling to think of how to do a project or how it should look, do some research. Look around your house or online and see what these projects look like in real life. The inspiration might be just what you need to get started!
